Policing and Violence in the Time of Trump

The new presidency in Washington promotes continued fortification of police and a fear-based narrative that refugees, immigrants and protestors constitute a threat. Yet many communities are coming together to reduce militarized law enforcement, make public officials more accountable, and address our society's racism.

Rev. Anthony P. (Tony) Johnson first worked on police-community conflicts and cooperation while a minister in Burbank, CA in the 1970s, when he was a member of the Los Angeles-based Citizen's Commission on Police Repression, and has been attentive to these issues ever since.

John Lindsay-Poland is an activist, analyst and researcher who coordinates the Wage Peace Program of the American Friends Service Committee in San Francisco
